Figure 1 The user's perspective is similar to viewing an iceberg. Users mainly observe the results of the business logic code, but this is only a small part of what builds the app's complete functionality. Like an iceberg that is mostly underwater and hidden from view, we don't see most of the code in an enterprise app because it's provided by dependencies.

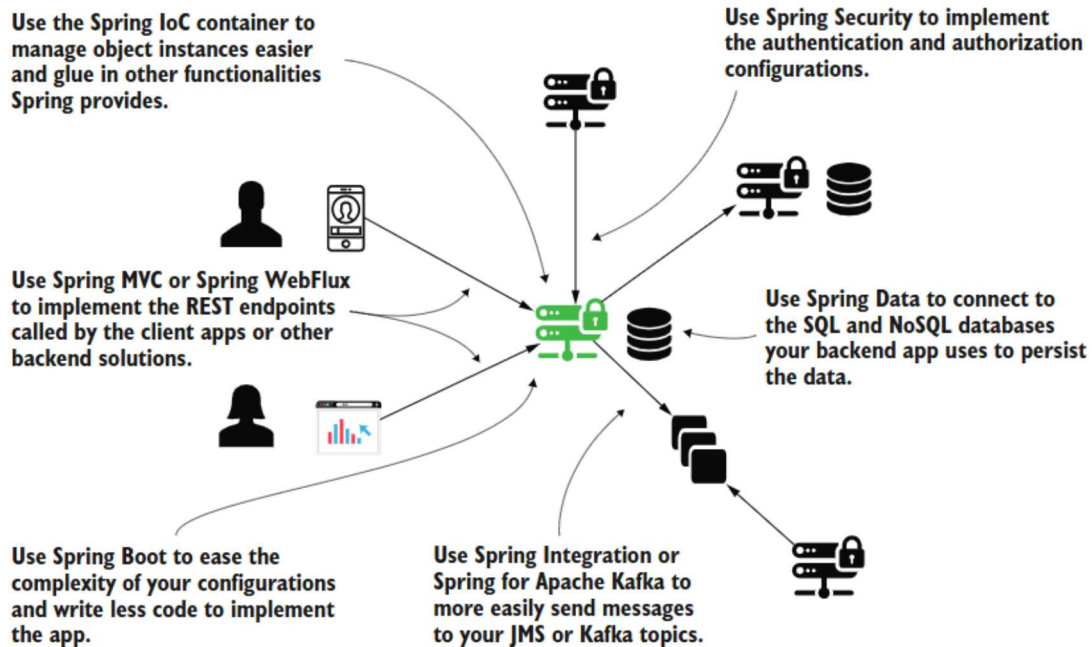

Figure 2 The possibilities of using Spring in a backend application are nearly endless, and include exposing functionalities that other applications can call, managing the database access, securing the application, and managing integration through third-party message brokers.
